On April 4, 2022. TPCoE's experts conducted training for the Government Strategic Reserve Agency. The above is part of the TPCoE's ongoing awareness-raising campaign among personnel of national government institutions, including those responsible for stockpiling essential emergency supplies.

The training raised the issue of current extremist-terrorist threats to the security of public space, of which the infrastructure of institutions storing reserves of vital importance to the functioning of the state is also a critical part. In this context, Center officials highlighted the use of anti-terrorism prevention procedures, particularly alert and crisis practices. The importance of efforts to build a stronger security culture was emphasized, and it was pointed out that a prerequisite for proper resilience of government facilities to threats is also consistent dissemination of knowledge among their operators and users about the nature of terrorism as a global phenomenon.
